1	Swann's Way – Remembrance Of Things Past	10:39
2	The stiffened side underneath my body would...	9:37
3	Riding at a jerky trot...	10:13
4	My sole consolation...	8:47
5	Our utter ignorance...	9:44
6	In the end...	9:49
7	But we sat silent.	10:14
8	I do not agree with you...	9:58
9	In this particular instance...	10:42
10	Noiselessly I opened the window...	10:06
11	I was not, however.	11:30
12	'My dear,' she had said to Mamma...	10:53
13	And so it was that...	7:25
14	And I begin again to ask myself...	7:31
15	COMBRAY	11:13
16	That rosy candlelight...	9:56
17	'Oh dear, dear; the poor little creature!'	9:34
18	While my aunt gossiped on in this way...	10:54
19	The church!	6:33
20	It was the steeple...	7:54

21	On our way home from mass...	9:39
22	And since, besides this...	9:24
23	Every morning I would hasten...	7:39
24	On the table was the same plate...	7:50
25	I had not the least idea...	9:51
26	But in later years...	10:12
27	The novelist's happy discovery...	9:22
28	Sometimes I would be torn from my book...	9:34
29	Before seeing them...	9:48
30	I was by no means Bergotte's sole admirer...	9:23
31	I dared not accept such an offer...	10:06
32	While I was reading in the garden...	9:56
33	'Look at Roussainville,'...	9:29
34	Françoise was avaricious...	8:29
35	When I say that...	10:24
36	His one and only passion...	9:18
37	She was genuinely fond of us...	8:37
38	One Sunday, when my aunt...	9:29
39	I crept out of the kitchen...	10:36
40	Just as we reached the house...	10:36

41	Of course he would never have admitted...	11:39
42	That land which knows not truth...	2:43
43	We used always to return...	7:03
44	When we had decided to go...	9:25
45	But it was in vain...	10:48
46	'Gilberte, come along; what are you doing?'	10:16
47	That year my family...	9:00
48	Anyone who, like ourselves...	8:50
49	Often, too, we would hurry...	9:16
50	During that autumn my parents...	11:24
51	That girl whom I never saw...	7:24
52	She was in deep mourning...	8:23
53	I remembered the words...	9:28
54	If the 'Méséglise way' was so easy...	10:30
55	Presently the course of the Vivonne...	10:10
56	And I knew that they bore not only the titles...	10:01
57	'It is, it must be Mme de Guermantes, and no one else!'	9:59
58	How often, after that day...	9:25
59	Alone, rising from the level...	2:49
60	I never thought again of this page...	7:37

61	The 'Méséglise way' with its lilacs...	8:17
62	Swann in Love	10:53
63	Just as it is not by other men...	10:51
64	But while each of these attachments...	9:15
65	He had sought an excuse...	10:00
66	When Mme Verdurin had announced...	11:01
67	From this lofty perch...	11:25
68	But the notes themselves...	9:49
69	The young pianist bent over her...	9:27
70	Greatly to Mme Verdurin's surprise...	9:30
71	But little did that matter to him...	10:03
72	And these affectations were in sharp contrast...	10:29
73	And when he was tempted...	10:36
74	Verdurin's...	9:33
75	Swann made Remi drive him...	9:59
76	However disillusioned we may be about women...	9:56
77	And the pleasure which the music gave him...	10:04
78	But, once in a while...	10:51
79	Swann made no attempt...	9:49
80	This charm of drawing him closer to her...	8:31

81	He might have reminded himself...	9:58
82	'Who is that gentleman?'	9:52
83	'It's not a Japanese salad, is it?'	10:10
84	She could scarcely have expected...	10:10
85	M. Verdurin had been wiser...	10:01
86	There are certain original...	10:24
87	If he were dining out...	10:44
88	And yet he was not sorry...	9:41
89	But then, at once, his jealousy...	10:08
90	Swann had, in fact...	9:14
91	In spite of all these manoeuvres...	7:38
92	At last the carriages were ordered.	7:01
93	He could see the pianist...	6:37
94	And so that drawing-room...	10:08
95	But when she had set off for Dreux...	10:14
96	But the thought of his absent mistress...	10:08
97	Ah! Had fate but allowed him...	10:15
98	Now that, after this swing...	8:50
99	But at other times...	7:17
100	Certainly, of the extent of this love...	8:21

101	But most of all...	10:18
102	There she was, often tired...	9:57
103	And yet he would have wished...	10:01
104	One day she announced...	8:55
105	A few feet away...	9:52
106	The Marquis de Forestelle's monocle...	9:14
107	At this moment...	10:02
108	She seemed not so much to be issuing an invitation...	9:51
109	'Oh, but Cambremer is quite a good name; old, too,'...	9:52
100	Swann, who was accustomed...	9:51
111	Meanwhile the concert had begun again...	9:36
112	As though the musicians...	9:41
113	So Swann was not mistaken in believing...	10:02
114	One night he dreamed that he was going away for a year...	9:47
115	The Prince des Laumes...	9:58
116	One day, after the longest period...	9:52
117	Instinctively Swann thought of the remark...	10:31
118	But he could not confine himself...	09:52
119	Besides, her very admissions...	10:57

Marcel Proust

(1871–1922)

Swann's Way

The critic André Maurois described Proust's Remembrance of Things Past as 'one of the greatest works of the imagination of all time'. The literal translation of the work's French title, 'In Search of Lost Time', contains within it a clue to the creation of this monumental work of biographical fiction. Having wasted time living a dilettante existence in the fashionable world, Proust, in middle age, decided to re-dedicate his life to art, and to attempt at last to achieve the great work of which he knew himself capable.

Remembrance of Things Past was his chance to justify his life, and to cheat death through an act of artistic creation. It was the means he would use to conquer time through recreating his lost years. Memory was the material with which he would weave the magic cord to be launched into infinity; that cord which now binds us to him, and stretches forward into the future, linking his genius to unborn generations.

The Author

Marcel Proust was born on 10 July 1871. His father, a distinguished professor of medicine, was from a Catholic family, while his mother was Jewish. Although convinced from an early age of his calling as a writer, Proust was riddled with self-doubt and wrote relatively little at the beginning of his career.

During his twenties, he co-founded a short-lived review, Le Banquet; contributed to another literary publication, La Revue Blanche; and in 1896 had his first book published, a collection of essays entitled Les Plaisirs et Les Jours.

He became an enthusiastic admirer of John Ruskin and translated his Bible of Amiens and Sesame and Lilies into French. A novel, Jean Santeuil, which was the precursor of Remembrance of Things Past, was abandoned, and eventually published long after Proust's death, in 1954.

For much of his youth, Proust led the life of a man-about-town, frequenting fashionable Paris drawing rooms and literary salons, which were to form the background of a number of his early stories and sketches, and subsequently of Remembrance of Things Past.

The death of his adored mother in 1905 resulted in a nervous collapse and aggravated his chronic asthma and insomnia. But, despite his grief and the sense of loss, from which he never recovered, his mother's death freed him with regard to his homosexual way of life, and allowed him to address same-sex love in his writing, albeit in a form which treated such experiences as happening to others rather than to himself.

In 1907 he moved into an apartment in the Boulevard Haussmann where, in the bedroom which he had had lined with cork to keep out noise, he embarked upon his great work À la Recherche du Temps Perdu (Remembrance of Things Past). In it, the minuteness of his observation, the depth of his psychological understanding and the vividness of his descriptive powers combined to create one of the most poetic and magical works in all literature.

Publication of Remembrance of Things Past

This long autobiographical cycle was originally published in eight sections: Du Côté de Chez Swann (Swann's Way) in 1913; A L'Ombre des Jeunes Filles en Fleurs (Within a Budding Grove) in 1918; Le Côté de Guermantes I (The Guermantes Way I) in 1920; Le Côté de Guermantes II and Sodom et Gomorrhe I (Cities of the Plain I) in 1921; Sodom et Gomorrhe II in 1922; La Prisonnière (The Captive) in 1923; Albertine Disparue (The Sweet Cheat Gone/The Fugitive) in 1925 and Le Temps Retrouvé (Time Regained) in 1927.

Proust was obliged to publish Swann's Way at his own expense, and even after it had appeared, had trouble finding a publisher for the next part, A L'Ombre des Jeunes Filles en Fleurs. However, when it appeared in 1918 it received considerable acclaim, and was awarded the Prix Goncourt the following year.

By the time Proust died, on 18 November 1922, the first four parts of the cycle had been published, leaving the others to appear posthumously.

Swann's Way

In Swann's Way, the narrator, in the person of the author, introduces us to his family: to the highly sensitive and imaginative child he was; to the mother he loved so passionately; and from whom to be parted was such agony; and to his father who, although loving him in his own way, was incapable of understanding the emotional behaviour of his nervous and delicate child.

The narrator (who, on the rare occasions he is named in the text, is given the author's own name, Marcel) and his parents travel to the country from Paris to spend their holidays at his great-aunt's house, in the little village of Combray. Here we meet his relatives in a succession of richly-drawn portraits: his grandmother, whose passion for nature and fresh air drives her to run up and down the garden paths in the pouring rain; his somewhat 'common' great aunt who takes every opportunity of putting down her more refined sister-in-law; his two spinster aunts, grown deaf through lack of interest in the dinner table conversations; and Aunt Leonie, who has retired permanently to her bed, from whence she learns, by observing the comings and goings in the street below her window, every detail of the lives of the village's inhabitants. We meet Charles Swann, proprietor of the neighbouring estate, whose evening visit is the cause of Marcel being sent early to bed, thus depriving him of his mother's precious goodnight kiss, which is necessary to enable him to sleep peacefully through the night.

Other neighbours also attract the interest of the precocious Marcel, whose highly developed powers of observation pierce through their urbane exteriors to the pretensions and hypocrisy beneath:

M. Legrandin, declared arch-enemy of snobbery, who cuts Marcel and his family when he is in the company of grander folk; the composer M. Vinteuil, who condemns Swann's 'unfortunate' marriage, whilst turning a blind eye to his daughter's lesbian love affair with an older woman; and Swann himself, who disparages the emptiness of high society, but devotes his life to parties, balls and sexual adventures.

Proust presents these characters with a depth of understanding of the human psyche which links him to another great figure of his time: Sigmund Freud. Proust, like Freud, understood the power of the past in influencing the present. The author's search for his former self is part of the process of understanding the person he has become.

The two 'Ways' (Swann's Way and The Guermites Way) are different directions taken by the narrator's family for their regular country walks, but are more than mere geographical designations. Through the thoughts, sensations and memories they invoke, each comes to represent a different aspect of life, another 'way' of being.

But no less memorable than the philosophical and social observations in Remembrance of Things Past are the rhapsodic and minutely observed descriptions of nature, in particular the hawthorn and lilac trees which filled the writer's youthful soul with such passionate love.

Swann in Love brings into focus the figure of Charles Swann, whom we have already met in the previous book. In Swann's Way we found Swann somewhat estranged from Marcel's family due to his unfortunate marriage to Odette de Cr cy, a demi-mondaine, whose dubious past prevents her from being received by 'respectable' people such as Marcel's family.

Swann in Love tells the story of Swann's love affair with Odette (which, chronologically, took place before the narrator's birth). We are introduced to the raffish Bohemian circle of M. and Mme Verdurin, of which Odette is a member. This is an unlikely social milieu in which to find Swann, a man of fashion whose elegant presence normally graces the most aristocratic and select drawing rooms. But now he is drawn by the powerful sexual appetite which rules his life.

To begin with, it is Odette who sets out to conquer Swann's heart. At first he is unresponsive to her style of beauty, and it is not until his aesthetic sensibilities are satisfied by the discovery of her likeness to a painting by Botticelli that his interest awakens. Once he has succumbed to her charms he finds himself at the mercy of a passion for a woman neither of his social class nor his intellectual equal. When he meets the Baron de Forcheville who appears to be replacing Swann in her affections, Swann falls prey to a consuming jealousy which, together with his discoveries relating to Odette's past, plunges him into despair.

In Place Names: The Name, once again the child Marcel is central to the narrative. Cheated by illness of his longed-for visit to the wild Breton coast, the golden streets of Florence, or the magical canals of Venice, he is obliged to substitute for these delights daily visits to the gardens of the Champs-Élysées in the company of the family's servant, Françoise. The tedium of these visits is suddenly and miraculously lifted when he once again meets Gilberte, the daughter of Swann and Odette, whom he first saw through the hawthorn hedge at Combray and with whom he instantly fell in love.

Having rediscovered Gilberte in Paris, Marcel now becomes obsessed with her, and his childish passion parallels Swann's love for Odette, in that Marcel, too, is obliged to suffer the indifference towards him of the one he loves. Like Swann (and perhaps like all lovers), Marcel is in love not with a real person, but with the creation of his fantasy.

Proust constantly reminds us that, as Shakespeare put it, 'nothing is, but thinking makes it so', a theme which runs right through Remembrance of Things Past. It suggests the author's awareness of the dawning era of psychology, for Proust, like Freud, understood that each person's perception is dictated by his or her personal experience. Thus the Swann Marcel knows in Combray is quite different from the Swann he sees as Gilberte's father; and his grandparents' view of their modest neighbour Swann is not the same as that of the occupants of fashionable Paris drawing rooms, who know him to be an intimate friend of the Comte de Paris, pretender to the French throne.

When Swann first hears the Andante from Vinteuil's Sonata, he is stirred to the depths of his soul, because through it he senses the possibility of reclaiming his 'lost' life, of renouncing his superficial existence and finding once again the faith and idealism of his youth. This sense of renewal, of being offered a second chance, is identified in Swann's mind with his love for Odette, and for this reason the musical theme becomes for him the 'national anthem' of their love. Just as Marcel, the narrator, is a fictional version of Proust himself, so too Swann embodies many of the author's characteristics, and both Proust and Swann were conscious of the time which had been lost and of the brevity of life in the face of their failing health.

The book ends with the elderly Marcel, many years later, wandering through the autumnal Bois de Boulogne seeking the shade of Odette. His imagination peoples the empty alleys with the elegant through which appeared there in the past. He recalls the proud horses and stylish carriages and, in particular, the enchanting figure of Odette, strolling through the park surrounded by a crowd of admiring men. But as the bright vision disappears, blown away by the cold wind of reality, he meditates on the inevitability of time passing and the painful impossibility of recapturing the past.

The Life and Work of Marcel Proust

To avoid any confusion, it may be helpful to point out that Proust's great work, À La Recherche du Temps Perdu, was originally translated into English by Charles K. Scott-Moncrieff and published in 1922 under the title Remembrance of Things Past. It was subsequently re-translated by Terence Kilmartin and appeared in 1981 as In Search of Lost Time. In 2002, a new edition appeared under the same title, with each volume assigned to a different translator. The Naxos AudioBooks recordings use the Scott-Moncrieff text and, in references to the work, I use Scott-Moncrieff's title.

My own contact with Proust began when, as a 17-year-old schoolboy, I first read Swann's Way. I could not have guessed then that, many years into the future, Proust would take over my life to such an extent. Over a six-year period during the 1990s, I abridged and recorded Remembrance of Things Past for Naxos Audiobooks, for whom I have now recorded this entire, uncut text.

When I was asked to write The Life and Work of Marcel Proust (see www.naxosaudiobooks.com), it occurred to me that, although the people on whom Proust based his characters were no longer living, the places he wrote about were still there, and so I travelled to France to see them.

I was delighted to discover that Illiers, where Marcel Proust spent his holidays as a child, and which figures in the book as Combray, is now marked on maps and road signs as Illiers-Combray, in official recognition of the reason for this sleepy village's wider fame.

In a narrow street just off the market square in Illiers-Combray is the house in which Proust's father, Adrien Proust, was born, and further along is the house of his aunt Élisabeth, now a Proust museum, where Élisabeth's fictional counterpart, the bedridden Aunt Léonie, watched the world go by from her bedroom window. Around the corner from the house is a little boulangerie with a sign in the window announcing proudly: 'This is where Aunt Léonie bought her madeleines'. It only occurs to me as I buy a packet of the scallop-shaped cakes, that Aunt Léonie is a creature of fiction. Never mind, Aunt Élisabeth might well have patronised the establishment, or one very like it. Up the hill there is a real house called Tansonville, the name of the house occupied by Charles Swann, and later by his daughter Gilberte and her husband Robert de Saint-Loup, and further on there is a real village called Méréglise, a name almost identical to the fictional Méséglise.

Water lilies are still reflected in the glassy surface of the river Loir, which in the book bears the more poetic name the Vivonne, and beyond the stream lies the Pré Catalan, the enchanting park created by Proust's horticulturally minded Uncle

Jules. From Illiers I travelled on to Cabourg, a seaside resort on the Normandy coast, the original of the fictional Balbec. Here I found the Grand Hotel in all its Edwardian splendour. It was rebuilt after Proust spent holidays there as a child, but he returned as an adult, and sections of Remembrance of Things Past were written beneath its roof. As in Within a Budding Grove, the great glass windows of the restaurant look out over the promenade to the beach below, and with a little imagination, that group of budding young girls in bikinis is transformed into the little band of 'jeunes filles en fleurs' outlined against the sea.

I travelled on to Paris, visiting 102 Boulevard Haussmann, Proust's home for many years, where he wrote so much of Remembrance of Things Past. The building is still owned by the same bank that purchased it from Proust's aunt, when her inconsiderate decision to sell it forced him to move. His bedroom is still there, but unfurnished, and to see the room as it was, one is obliged to visit the Musée Carnavalet, where Proust's bed, chaise-longue and other effects are displayed in a reconstruction of the famous cork-lined room.

A walk to the gardens of the Champs Élysées brought me to an area with a sign announcing that I am in the Allée Marcel Proust. Children chase each other – perhaps playing the modern equivalent of 'prisoners base', the game played by Gilberte and her friends. This is where the real Marcel played as a child with the real Marie de Benardaky, with whom he fell in love, just as the fictional Marcel falls in love with the fictional Gilberte Swann.

In the real world, the same spaces are occupied now by different people. Time has moved on, but places remain, and we have the privilege of being present in not only the imaginary world Proust created, but that portion of the real world which had a part in its creation. His presence has left behind a trace of magic, and we see places differently, because we see them through his eyes. One day those places will have crumbled into dust, as will we ourselves, and the space we now consider ours will be occupied by others. But as long as civilisation remains, those who come after us will be able to share Proust's vision and enter his world. Proust was aware that art is the only true reality, and that through his creations the artist continues to live after his death, beyond space and beyond time.

Swann's Way

Read by Neville Jason

The Life and Work of Marcel Proust

Remembrance of Things Past is one of the monuments of 20th-century literature. Neville Jason's widely praised 36 CD abridged version has rightly become an audiobook landmark and now, upon numerous requests, he is recording the whole work unabridged which, when complete, will run for some 140 hours.

Swann's Way is the first of seven volumes and sets the scene with the narrator's memories famously provoked by the taste of that little cake, the madeleine, accompanied by a cup of lime-flowered tea. It is an unmatched portrait of fin-de-siècle France.

Neville Jason trained at RADA, where he was awarded the diction prize by Sir John Gielgud. He is a former member of the Old Vic Company and the Royal Shakespeare Company, amongst others. He has been a member of the BBC Radio Drama Company three times, and is heard regularly in radio plays, documentaries and arts programmes. For Naxos AudioBooks his readings include Vasari's Lives of the Great Artists, War and Peace, Far From the Maddening Crowd and The Castle of Otranto. He won AudioFile Earphone awards for The Captive and Time Regained.
